The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, "Look behind you!" and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom's mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper-time. His face is streaked with soot and tar, and a funny pool of tar can be seen on the floor of his room. His hands are all white, and his clothes are muddy and dirty. His face is flushed, and his hair is greasy and matted. Aunt Polly is satisfied.

Tom and the new arrival eat dinner in the dining room, where the air is warm and the scent of roasting venison fills the air. Aunt Polly is impressed by Tom's new manner of eating and eventually chooses him as the new master of the house.

When he arrives home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirty clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Tom passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a "half alleys," a kind of mattress. Tom almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his tasks.

Tom comes home at suppertime and finds Aunt Polly sitting wearily by her spinning-wheel. She has just been castigated by the school authorities for neglecting Tom's education. Tom, as usual, is none too sorry. While Aunt Polly is satisfied, Tom is not.

Tom goes out of the house to smoke a pipe and thinks about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly says, "You have been skipped school that afternoon and went instead to the candy store that has candy so near here that you could have snatched it when you stole a box of tobacco.

Tom and the new arrival are so engrossed in the new acquisition that they do not even notice the aunt.,
