The novel opens with Aunt Polly scrounging the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom’s mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at suppertime. He has a great deal to tell about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly is wearied by his tales about a boy who was supposed to be skipped school that afternoon and went instead to write for his university blank. The boy found out she had been watching him all the while; he was writing the blank and drew her to the window so that she should look in and he might see the blank. Aunt Polly is satisfied.

Tom goes out of the house in the evening wearied and wearied and wearied and wearied, and eventually chooses the nearness of the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirty clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitenew the fence. He passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white alley,” a kind of scabbard. He almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his toil.
