The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, "Look behind you!" and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes out the window. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom's mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper-time. He is very solemn. "I have been very bad," he says. "I have been skipped school that afternoon and went rivering. I have been whistling. While wandering the streets of St. Petersburg I have overheard and oggled. Tom and the new arrival eat their supper in silence. They are both surprised and eventually choose the newcomers as the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly woke Tom out to whiterush the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a "white alley," a kind of stubble. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his toils.

Tom comes home at supper-time--or rather, late in the afternoon. He is very dirty and famished, has a listless look in his eye, and a very ill-smelling bundle of boys' clothing under his arm. His aunt is puzzled; Tom has no clothes and no list of things to do. Tom explains that he was not skipped school that afternoon and went on a spree with his friend, but that Tom's half-brother, his uncle Sid, Tuttle, was not happy about it. Tom has learned the heat of the sun and has decided to return home.

Tom goes out of the house into the coolness of the street. The sun is setting, and the town is alive with activity. Tom sees his aunt, who is now very tired, and goes to see what he can do to help. Tom is sent to run errands and to help with the cooking.
