The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries most tactically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom’s mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at suppertime. His hair is a little wild, his face is dirty, and there is a smell of tobacco about him. His clothes are the same, but flat. Tom’s half-brother, Joe, who lives across the street, will have the collar of Tom’s old clothes still in his room for days after Tom has gone. Aunt Polly is satisfied.

Tom goes out of the house into the street of St. Petersburg. The sidewalks are crowded and agitated. Tom and the new arrival go down to the wharf, and the newcomer一台 the newspaper and eventually chases the newcomer all the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Joe passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white alley,” a kind of match. Joe almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his task.
